Poem for the Inauguration of Richard F. Wilson by James McGowan, Professor of English Emeritus

Sestina: Knowledge and Wisdom

This is a happy day at IWU, bestowing trust upon a man to lead us in our work in offices, in classrooms, laboratories, studios - pursuing knowledge, as we say, and hoping to inspire students to begin the quest for wisdom

If we can. But it is rare, this wisdom, and is it often seen, even at IWU?
No guarantee, though we persist, and may inspire students and ourselves toward this high goal. For us it's best we concentrate on knowledge.
“Knowledge” and “college” rhyme. Our classrooms are appropriate for its pursuit - classrooms of philosophy, of science: the “wisdom of the ages” or the sudden thrust of knowledge at the cutting edge. At IWU things sometimes happen that astonish us.

Teachers and students work together to inspire breakthroughs in physics, or a poem may inspire a piece of music. Practiced in our classrooms, art displays, performances extend to us a felt experience, a kind of wisdom of imagination, proved along the nerves. You need this too, another kind of knowledge.

There is a menace in America today: Knowledge mis-valued by myopic moralists, who inspire bigotry we must deplore at IWU, smug ignorance we must challenge and oppose. Classrooms of learned give and take expand our minds Wisdom may be elusive anywhere, but as for us we see where wisdom's not. It's up to us to meet the new Know-Nothings in the name of knowledge, excellence of intellect, a sign of wisdom.

Sicne is spurned, language debased; let us inspire Attention, mental vigilance in all our classrooms.
May you be steadfast in this struggle, IWU.

We stand for knowledge as we hope for wisdom to inspire us in classrooms, in our lives.
Scientia, Sapientia. IWU.
