Ismail Merchant
Producer/Director/Author
Merchant Ivory Productions

Merchant Ivory is not a person, but a creative team that has produced many tasteful, memorable movies over the past 30 years, including "Shakespeare Wallah," "Heat and Dust," "The Bostonians," "A Room with a View," "Mr. and Mrs. Bridge," "The Remains Of The Day," and "Howards End," literally to name just a few. Director James Ivory, writer Ruth Prawer Jhabvala, and, of course, Ismail Merchant have been a creative force that confers a literary elegance on each of their films.

Ismail Merchant's creativity is revealed, however, not only under the aegis of his production company, but also on his own. He has written for film and television, directed a feature length film "In Custody (1991)," and full-length television features for the British Broadcasting Corporation (BBC). Merchant also has published two cookbooks—"Ismail Merchant's Indian Cuisine (1986)," and "Ismail Merchant's Passionate Meals: The New Indian Cuisine For Fearless Cooks and Adventurous Eaters (1994),"--as well as three other books about movies, and food. Merchant is also a gourmet cook and restaurateur.

But it is as a film producer that Ismail Merchant is most widely known, having worked with actors of renown like Anthony Hopkins, Emma Thompson, Jeanne Moreau, Vanessa Redgrave, Paul Newman, Joanne Woodward, Ben Kingsley, Denholm Elliott, Helena Bonham Carter, Daniel Day Lewis, Maggie Smith, Jessica Tandy, Christopher Reeve, Julie Christie and many, many others. He has just finished producing Merchant Ivory's 40th film, "A Soldier's Daughter Never Cries," starring Kris Kristofferson and Barbara Hershey, based on the novel by Kaylie Jones.

Ismail Merchant was born on December 25, 1936 in Bombay, India. He was educated at St. Xavier's University, Bombay, and received a Master's Degree in business administration at New York University. He met James Ivory in 1960 when Merchant was 24 and Ivory 32. At that time, Merchant had co-produced one film, an Oscar-nominated 1960 short, "The Creation of Woman." They formed Merchant Ivory Productions soon after they met and their first film, "The Householder" (1963), was the first film made in India to be distributed worldwide by a major American company, Columbia Pictures.
