

---

Inauguration of Eric R. Jensen

Eric R. Jensen

---

4-2-2016

Poem for the Inauguration: The Spirit Line

Joanne Diaz

Illinois Wesleyan University

Michael Theune

Illinois Wesleyan University

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.iwu.edu/jensen\_inauguration

Part of the Higher Education Commons, and the Poetry Commons

---

Recommended Citation

Diaz, Joanne and Theune, Michael, "Poem for the Inauguration: The Spirit Line" (2016).
Inauguration of Eric R. Jensen. 1.

https://digitalcommons.iwu.edu/jensen\_inauguration/1

This Book is protected by copyright and/or related rights. It has been brought to you by Digital Commons @ IWU with permission from the rights-holder(s). You are free to use this material in any way that is permitted by the copyright and related rights legislation that applies to your use. For other uses you need to obtain permission from the rights-holder(s) directly, unless additional rights are indicated by a Creative Commons license in the record and/ or on the work itself. This material has been accepted for inclusion by faculty at Illinois Wesleyan University. For more information, please contact digitalcommons@iwu.edu.

©Copyright is owned by the author of this document.

Michael Theune and Joanne Diaz

The Spirit Line

On Acoma, Laguna, Zuni and Hopi ceramics, a painted double line with ends that do not connect often encircles the vessel just below the rim on the interior surface. This is called a spirit line or spirit break [...] the open line's presence permits the spirit of the vessel to enter and leave it.

—Guide to the John Wesley Powell Collection of Pueblo Pottery

A casual glance might not reveal it, but if you look closely, you can see the double line that circles the rim of the bowl, comes all the way around, but does not quite close: this is where the spirit of the vessel enters and leaves, this mark that preserves and offers, holds and shares.

It is of course flaw, imperfection, wound, a sudden extinction: an equator that bears the ghosts of invasion, forgotten fairy tales of a tyrant's rule, the trace of a creature endangered by its very existence, the message that music, with its dark seeds, sends from the past, only to evaporate in the air that receives it.

It echoes the breaking of the jars and canteens that did not survive; it marks any object pulled from its context, so easily misappropriated by facile certainties and unintended loss. It is the parentheses filled with too much silence.

The line nearly dissolves under this pressure, but then it opens into possibility, a synapse, open air for a pirouette, canvas or page where space has been saved for another line.

Here is the place where the spirit can move, a porous membrane between self and other, art and nature, mind and world, where is cultivated the care required for our incalculable responsibility.

Let the spirit line be a symbol for this university [no stanza break]

where the questions are continually reinscribed:

Who are we? What is good? How do we live? To whom do we promise our labors? With whom must we make amends? We scientists and artists, writers and activists, humanists and healers, we who strive to make lives that are useful and beautiful and true are drawn together here and enlivened by these questions, such precious, fragile things—