EDWARD O. WILSON

The David and Ann Lawrence Visiting Fellow

Edward O. Wilson, Pellegrino University Research Professor, Emeritus, at Harvard University, is one of the most highly respected scientists in the world today.

Wilson has won the Pulitzer Prize twice — once for On Human Nature (1978) and again for The Ants (1991). Time Magazine has hailed Wilson as one of “America’s 25 Most Influential People,” and Tom Wolfe, writing in

Forbes magazine in 1996, dubbed Wilson “a new Darwin.”

His 1992 volume, The Diversity of Life brought together knowledge of the magnitude of biodiversity and the threats to it and had a major public impact.

Consilience: The Unity of Knowledge (1998) draws together the sciences, humanities, and the arts into a broad study of human knowledge. Most recently, he wrote The Future of Life (2002), which offers a plan for saving Earth’s biological heritage.

A native of Alabama, Wilson received his bachelor’s and master’s degrees from the University of Alabama where he devoted much of his early career to the study of ants. He received his doctorate from Harvard and joined the Harvard faculty in 1956. Today he continues entomological and environmental research at the Museum of Comparative Zoology.

Wilson has received some 75 awards in international recognition for his contributions to science and humanity, including the U.S. National Medal of Science (1976), Japan’s International Prize for Biology (1993), the Crafoord Prize from the Royal Swedish Academy of Sciences (1990), the French Prix du Institut de la Vie (1990), Germany’s Terrestrial Ecology Prize (1987), Saudi Arabia’s King Faisal International Prize for Science (2000), and the Franklin Medal of the American Philosophical Society (1999).

For his conservation work he has received the Audubon Medal of the National Audubon Society and the Gold Medal of the World Wide Fund for Nature. He is also the recipient of 27 honorary doctoral degrees from North America and Europe.
