Reed, who grew up in a suburb of Minneapolis, Minn., has been performing for over 25 years. Since teaching herself to play the guitar at the age of 12, Reed has gone on to make 15 albums, perform in numerous festivals and win many awards. Some of her credits include performances at world-renowned venues such as Bumbershoot, held annually in Seattle, Wash., the annual Winnipeg Folk Festival, held in Canada, as well as television and radio appearances, including Good Morning America.

Receiving recognition from the likes of Billboard Magazine, the National Association of Independent Recording Distributors and the Minnesota Music Academy, critics call Reed’s Minnesota folk-style music “uplifting and heartfelt.” She plays the 12-string guitar, mandolin, standup bass, six-string guitar, lap harp and piano.

Reed combines her artistry with community involvement, donating 25 percent of her time to helping nonprofit groups that support women and children. She also started her own record label, named A Major Label, and recently released a two-CD set commemorating her 25 years of performing.
