About the Authors

About the Authors

Melissa Arms is a recent graduate of IWU, currently working as a Management Consultant for Ernst and Young in St. Louis. She received a double degree in economics and international studies. Melissa researched her topic in order to determine whether investing on the basis of her activist principles would lead to financial detriment.

Korey Harlyn Coon is a junior risk management and financial services major with minors in history and economics. Growing up in the Peoria area, he witnessed labor-management relations at Caterpillar's national headquarters. Korey is a member of several academic honorary societies and serves as the Treasurer of the Risk Management and Finance Society.

Patrick Holly, Jr. is a senior economics and business administration double major from Downer's Grove, IL. His interests lie in Star Wars, computers and rollerblading. His technological curiosity and experience interning at the Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago led to his paper on the effects of technology growth on money supply and demand.

Jaclyn K. Hood is a senior double major in economics and math. Her paper on the determinants of home ownership reflects both of these fields of study, incorporating the rarely-used logistic model into economic research. Jaclyn is a member of multiple organizations including the Economics

Society, Yearbook staff, and the Ambassador's Club. She enjoys traveling in her spare time.

Katie Hundman is a recent IWU graduate working for State Farm as a Real Estate Investment Accounting Analyst. Her interest in derivatives stems from an internship with Deloitte and Touche in Washington, D.C., where she researched banking regulations and legislative issues.

Sunil Jagwani is a junior computer science and economics double major with a minor in business finance. He is from Jodhpur, India. Sunil's extra-curricular activities include the Economics Society, Student Senate, Association for Computer Machinery executive board, Business Editor of the Yearbook, and drawing cartoons for The Argus.

Kristopher Kaneta is a junior economics and business administration double major from Honolulu, Hawaii. Kris attended high school in Hong Kong and has also lived in Taiwan and China. This has led to his interest in immigration policies in the U.S.

Nathan Taulbee is a junior economics and business administration double major from Taylorville, IL. His concern for the future of the Social Security system led to his paper on this topic. He is the secretary of the Economics Society and attended the Business Tomorrow National Leadership Conference in Chicago, IL in October 1998.
