

Illinois Wesleyan University
Digital Commons @ IWU

---

John Wesley Powell Student Research
Conference

1998, 9th Annual JWP Conference

---

Apr 18th, 10:45 AM - 11:00 AM

A Feminist Analysis of Prenatal Care in the U.S.

Shailushi Baxi

Illinois Wesleyan University

D. J. Waldman, Faculty Advisor

Illinois Wesleyan University

Follow this and additional works at: <https://digitalcommons.iwu.edu/jwprc>

---

Baxi, Shailushi and Waldman, Faculty Advisor, D. J., "A Feminist Analysis of Prenatal Care in the U.S." (1998). John Wesley Powell Student Research Conference. 2.

<https://digitalcommons.iwu.edu/jwprc/1998/oralpres/2>

This Event is protected by copyright and/or related rights. It has been brought to you by Digital Commons @ IWU with permission from the rights-holder(s). You are free to use this material in any way that is permitted by the copyright and related rights legislation that applies to your use. For other uses you need to obtain permission from the rights-holder(s) directly, unless additional rights are indicated by a Creative Commons license in the record and/ or on the work itself. This material has been accepted for inclusion by faculty at Illinois Wesleyan University. For more information, please contact digitalcommons@iwu.edu.

©Copyright is owned by the author of this document.

Oral Presentation 1.2

A FEMINIST ANALYSIS OF PRENATAL CARE IN THE U.S.

Shailushi Baxi and D.J. Waldman*
Philosophy Department, Illinois Wesleyan University

The aim of this project is to analyze the U.S. system of prenatal care from a feminist point of view. I begin by investigating the connection between prenatal care and birth outcomes; studies indicate that adequate prenatal care is almost causally related to positive birth outcomes. However, certain women are likely to fail to receive proper care. A set of maternal characteristics describes women who are unlikely to receive adequate prenatal care. Since these same characteristics also describe women in poverty, I propose that poverty is the underlying cause of women's inability to receive proper health care. An examination of the dynamics of poverty reveals that the forces which place people in poverty affect women more than men. In addition, welfare, which is meant to assist the poor, actually prevents people- particularly women- from climbing out of poverty.

Using Ronald Dworkin's theory of social justice, I argue that because of the way welfare works, poverty effectively undermines women's equality as citizens. This theory, called the Equality of Resources theory, requires that each person has equal access to community resources and no person utilizes more than his/her share. In order to maintain women's equality, some type of welfare must therefore compensate for the inequalities in access to resources, including prenatal care. However, the present system of welfare does not compensate adequately for any inequalities; in particular, poor women are prevented from seeking adequate prenatal care. In order to restore women's equality as citizens, welfare must be reformed to include prenatal care for poor women.