

Illinois Wesleyan University
Digital Commons @ IWU

John Wesley Powell Student Research
Conference

1999, 10th Annual JWP Conference

Apr 17th, 2:30 PM - 4:00 PM

Listening to the Native Voice: Museums as a Medium in Correcting Native American Stereotypes

Shana Bushyhead
Illinois Wesleyan University

April Schultz, Faculty Advisor
Illinois Wesleyan University

Follow this and additional works at: <https://digitalcommons.iwu.edu/jwprc>

Bushyhead, Shana and Schultz, Faculty Advisor, April, "Listening to the Native Voice: Museums as a Medium in Correcting Native American Stereotypes" (1999). John Wesley Powell Student Research Conference. 4.
<https://digitalcommons.iwu.edu/jwprc/1999/oralpres4/4>

This Event is protected by copyright and/or related rights. It has been brought to you by Digital Commons @ IWU with permission from the rights-holder(s). You are free to use this material in any way that is permitted by the copyright and related rights legislation that applies to your use. For other uses you need to obtain permission from the rights-holder(s) directly, unless additional rights are indicated by a Creative Commons license in the record and/ or on the work itself. This material has been accepted for inclusion by faculty at Illinois Wesleyan University. For more information, please contact digitalcommons@iwu.edu.

©Copyright is owned by the author of this document.

Oral Presentation 4.1

LISTENING TO THE NATIVE VOICE: MUSEUMS AS A MEDIUM IN CORRECTING NATIVE AMERICAN STEREOTYPES

Shana Bushyhead and April Schultz*

Department of History, Illinois Wesleyan University

Native Americans have historically been viewed as a static, and even dead culture. Of course this is simply not true. Native Americans are an evolving, ever-changing, ever-growing culture. I believe it is the responsibility of museums not only to educate on Native American culture, but also to promote contemporary artists and historians to show through example that Native American culture is not static.

My project consists of three parts. The first is to describe the responsibilities of museums to educate the general public on Native American culture and history, and also to educate Native Americans themselves in their own culture and history. In order to do this, I will first trace the history of museums' effect on Native culture and the country's view of Native Americans from about 1880 to the present. From this history, I will then show the importance of the museum as a medium in which to educate the public, and also the importance in the Native American community. Museums have the power to build community and self-worth, which is extremely important in a culture raising itself from years of oppression.

The second part is viewing, and evaluating several tribal museums. The tribal museums will consist of the Museum of the Cherokee Indian in Cherokee, North Carolina, the Southwest Museum in Los Angeles, California, and the National Museum of the American Indian which is associated with the Smithsonian Institute, but is still considered a tribal museum, albeit on a much larger scale. I will see how they incorporate different theories of museum studies in their museums, and how they handle problems specifically associated with Native American artifacts, such as repatriation and the display of sacred objects.

The final part will be a case study exhibiting the John Wesley Powell Collection housed in Sheean Library. The exhibition of these pieces will put into practice the theories and ideas gathered from the previous two parts.