The Crossfit Coup D'Etat: A Look at a Dynamic New Lifestyle Combating Modern Lethargy

Geoffrey Evans-Grimm
Illinois Wesleyan University

Rebecca Gearhart, Faculty Advisor
Illinois Wesleyan University

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.iwu.edu/jwprc

Part of the Anthropology Commons, and the Sociology Commons

https://digitalcommons.iwu.edu/jwprc/2010/posters/11

This Event is protected by copyright and/or related rights. It has been brought to you by Digital Commons @ IWU with permission from the rights-holder(s). You are free to use this material in any way that is permitted by the copyright and related rights legislation that applies to your use. For other uses you need to obtain permission from the rights-holder(s) directly, unless additional rights are indicated by a Creative Commons license in the record and/or on the work itself. This material has been accepted for inclusion by faculty at Illinois Wesleyan University. For more information, please contact digitalcommons@iwu.edu.
©Copyright is owned by the author of this document.
What does it mean to be a healthy individual? What do I have to do to achieve this standard? Is there an easy way to lose weight? These questions permeate life in America and we are provided with a plethora of answers involving varying uses of diets, exercises, and medications. But there is one group emerging that is not seeking an easy solution; they recognize the extreme lifestyle change that is necessary to achieve true health and fitness. This new community calls itself CrossFit and was founded by former gymnast, Greg Glassman in 1996. CrossFit methods, although not well known, have a firm grounding in scientific testing and biological evolution. I conducted ethnographic research with a local chapter, CrossFit Bloomington-Normal, to explore the sub-culture that identifies with this new science and healthcare system. I have combined existing scientific research with my collaborative ethnographic fieldwork to explore the cultural identity of people who have chosen CrossFit as a lifestyle.