Choice, Coercion and Conflict: Linguistic Human Rights, Cultural Liberty and Peacekeeping in a Globalized World

Megan Thompson
Illinois Wesleyan University

William Munro, Faculty Advisor
Illinois Wesleyan University

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.iwu.edu/jwprc

https://digitalcommons.iwu.edu/jwprc/2012/oralpres8/1

This Event is protected by copyright and/or related rights. It has been brought to you by Digital Commons @ IWU with permission from the rights-holder(s). You are free to use this material in any way that is permitted by the copyright and related rights legislation that applies to your use. For other uses you need to obtain permission from the rights-holder(s) directly, unless additional rights are indicated by a Creative Commons license in the record and/or on the work itself. This material has been accepted for inclusion by faculty at Illinois Wesleyan University. For more information, please contact digitalcommons@iwu.edu.
©Copyright is owned by the author of this document.
The development of English into an international lingua franca is not, as scholars have argued, an inevitable result of globalization. Instead, the “triumph” of English and the consequent decline of the world’s linguistic diversity cannot be viewed in isolation of the parallel history of conquest, violence, and exploitation. Today, the languages privileged by the powerful—not only English, but also other dominant and national languages, or standard varieties of those languages—are a prerequisite for mobility. This fact renders any discussion of language “choice” irrelevant—when a choice yields the fulfillment of basic human capabilities on one hand and the denial of those capabilities on the other, the issue becomes one not of choice, but of rights. Drawing on Amartya Sen’s work, this paper addresses these issues through the analysis of personal narratives of multilingual individuals, calling for an understanding of language as a right and resource for human development and conflict prevention.