Levin's Happiness as Tolstoy's Model for Life

Rachel Branson
Illinois Wesleyan University

Marina Balina, Faculty Advisor
Illinois Wesleyan University

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.iwu.edu/jwprc

https://digitalcommons.iwu.edu/jwprc/2012/oralpres12/3

This Event is protected by copyright and/or related rights. It has been brought to you by Digital Commons @ IWU with permission from the rights-holder(s). You are free to use this material in any way that is permitted by the copyright and related rights legislation that applies to your use. For other uses you need to obtain permission from the rights-holder(s) directly, unless additional rights are indicated by a Creative Commons license in the record and/ or on the work itself. This material has been accepted for inclusion by faculty at Illinois Wesleyan University. For more information, please contact digitalcommons@iwu.edu.
©Copyright is owned by the author of this document.
This presentation will examine the distinct didactic role of the Constantine Levin character in Leo Tolstoy’s novel Anna Karenina. Through Tolstoy’s own views on the purpose of art – that an artist should unreservedly relive his or her own experience for the sake of an audience’s vicarious experience – he created a protagonist of such a compelling imitation of humanity that Levin lives beyond the pages of the novel. As such, Levin’s educational role is unique. Tolstoy does not advocate that Levin’s life is to be emulated by the reader, but rather that it should serve as a cause to reexamine our own lives by means of the common human experiences which Tolstoy so deftly illustrates in Anna Karenina. Examining Tolstoy’s purpose for Levin primarily through Gary Saul Morson’s theory of “prosaics” and Levin’s own weaknesses in coping with everyday life occurrences, the author’s own conflicts are revealed, allowing the reader to more fully experience the power of Tolstoy’s message.