Building a Community of Writers: Implementing Writer's Workshop in a First Grade Classroom

Kristen Gattuso
Illinois Wesleyan University

Robin Leavitt, Faculty Advisor
Illinois Wesleyan University

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.iwu.edu/jwprc

https://digitalcommons.iwu.edu/jwprc/2012/ESposters/13

This Event is protected by copyright and/or related rights. It has been brought to you by Digital Commons @ IWU with permission from the rights-holder(s). You are free to use this material in any way that is permitted by the copyright and related rights legislation that applies to your use. For other uses you need to obtain permission from the rights-holder(s) directly, unless additional rights are indicated by a Creative Commons license in the record and/or on the work itself. This material has been accepted for inclusion by faculty at Illinois Wesleyan University. For more information, please contact digitalcommons@iwu.edu.

©Copyright is owned by the author of this document.
Acknowledgements

I owe a huge thank you to my cooperating teacher, my faculty advisor, and my wonderful students—for taking this journey with me and supporting me along the way.

Research Questions

• What does writer’s workshop look like in the first grade classroom?
• How might the writer’s workshop model motivate students to express themselves and stimulate an interest in writing?
• How might explicitly teaching the writing process improve the quality of writing?

Data Collection

• Field notes, student work samples, photographs, lesson plans

Methodology

• Writer’s workshop was implemented twice a week for 45 minutes each day over the course of three months.
• The framework of the writer’s workshop began with a ten-minute mini-lesson that included an interactive read-aloud. About thirty minutes of workshop time followed. The last five minutes were devoted to sharing.

Findings and Implications

• First graders were capable of both learning the writing process and applying it to improve the quality of their writing.
• Clear and meaningful purpose to writing positively affected students’ motivation and quality of work.
• Providing choice and ensuring student success encouraged motivation.
• Planning mini-lessons according to student need was key in improving their quality of writing.
• Students demonstrated independence in writing and applied what they learned in writer’s workshop to other content areas.
• Modeling the writing process and a love of writing was imperative to instilling a passion for writing in students at the early elementary level.
• “I’ve never seen this kind of writing from my first graders this early on in the year.” (my cooperating teacher)