Motivating High School English Students Through Practical and Creative Writing Assignments

Courtney Keenan
Illinois Wesleyan University

Sumer Seiki, Faculty Advisor
Illinois Wesleyan University

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.iwu.edu/jwprc

Keenan, Courtney and Seiki, Faculty Advisor, Sumer, "Motivating High School English Students Through Practical and Creative Writing Assignments" (2012). John Wesley Powell Student Research Conference. 19.
https://digitalcommons.iwu.edu/jwprc/2012/ESposters/19

This Event is protected by copyright and/or related rights. It has been brought to you by Digital Commons @ IWU with permission from the rights-holder(s). You are free to use this material in any way that is permitted by the copyright and related rights legislation that applies to your use. For other uses you need to obtain permission from the rights-holder(s) directly, unless additional rights are indicated by a Creative Commons license in the record and/or on the work itself. This material has been accepted for inclusion by faculty at Illinois Wesleyan University. For more information, please contact digitalcommons@iwu.edu.
©Copyright is owned by the author of this document.
Motivating Students Through Practical and Creative Writing Assignments

Courtney Keenan
Educational Studies Department, Illinois Wesleyan University

Research Question

What new kinds of writing assignments can you incorporate as a teacher to foster student motivation?

The Problem

High school English class content in the United States is most often geared toward responding to literary texts and passing standardized tests, and because of this lack of variety and purpose in the curriculum, students are not motivated to write (Daisey, 2009). Giving students freedom of choice in their assignments and providing assignments that have future relevance can help students find enjoyment in writing.

Methodology

I analyzed teacher-action research studies to find ways of effectively incorporating creative and practical writing in the classroom to increase motivation and self-efficacy in students.

Findings & Conclusions

- After a communications project working with a local non-profit, students felt excited about the writing process and more comfortable “writing in new situations and advocating for themselves and others through writing” (Cox, 2009).
- Expressive writing such as slam poetry was found to be a powerful means of self-representation for youth and “empowered those students to examine issues in U.S. society” (Camangian, 2008).
- Student motivation increased when they had the freedom of choice over what they wrote about, which made students feel that their writing was meaningful and bringing new knowledge into readers’ lives (Falkner, 2011).
- The product of student publication inspires students’ investment in the entire process of writing (Gordon, 2007).

General Findings

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>When Writing is Assigned</th>
<th>When Writing is Taught</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Students write on teacher assigned topics.</td>
<td>Students create their own topics that matter to them.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Teachers create assignments with no specified audience or purpose.</td>
<td>Students can see and are motivated by real-world application in papers with a distinct audience and purpose.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Students are not shown how they have improved as writers.</td>
<td>Students reflect on growth (or lack of it) for specific writing skills.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Students are simply given the assignment, without prewriting exercises.</td>
<td>Students are asked to brainstorm, prewrite, discuss, and free write before assignments.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Students and teachers are bored by writing assignments.</td>
<td>Students and teachers are excited about what students write and make efforts to publish or display it.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Students are asked to analyze, compare, narrate, review, and summarize without the strategies to successfully complete these tasks.</td>
<td>Students are given writing models, assignments, and strategies to guide each of their writing tasks. (Nagin, 2003)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

"The point of writing is to have something to say and to make a difference saying it. Rarely, however, is impact the focus in writing instruction in English class, where the process is formulaic rather than purposeful.” –Grant Wiggins

---

Research Question

What new kinds of writing assignments can you incorporate as a teacher to foster student motivation?

---

The Problem

High school English class content in the United States is most often geared toward responding to literary texts and passing standardized tests, and because of this lack of variety and purpose in the curriculum, students are not motivated to write (Daisey, 2009). Giving students freedom of choice in their assignments and providing assignments that have future relevance can help students find enjoyment in writing.

Methodology

I analyzed teacher-action research studies to find ways of effectively incorporating creative and practical writing in the classroom to increase motivation and self-efficacy in students.