Apr 16th, 10:00 AM - 11:00 AM

The Girl With the Dragon Tattoo and the Swedish Guardianship Program

Hilary Doyle
_Illinois Wesleyan University_

Adam Woodis, Faculty Advisor
_Illinois Wesleyan University_

Follow this and additional works at: http://digitalcommons.iwu.edu/jwprc

Part of the Education Commons, and the German Language and Literature Commons

http://digitalcommons.iwu.edu/jwprc/2016/oralpres9/1

This Event is brought to you for free and open access by The Ames Library, the Andrew W. Mellon Center for Curricular and Faculty Development, the Office of the Provost and the Office of the President. It has been accepted for inclusion in Digital Commons @ IWU by the faculty at Illinois Wesleyan University. For more information, please contact digitalcommons@iwu.edu.
©Copyright is owned by the author of this document.
Governments implement a variety of economic and social program in an attempt to ensure a reasonably high standard of living for the majority of its citizens, as well as to help those for whom independent living is not possible without some form of assistance. In Sweden, one such program utilizes a tiered guardianship system in order to support those citizens who are considered to be vulnerable adults due to an inability to care for themselves. These vulnerable adults are appointed a guardian who helps ensure that the recipient is able to accomplish the tasks that are required to be a functioning member of society. The level and duration of the supervision over an individual in the guardianship program is determined on a case-by-case basis by the Swedish courts. While the system is beneficial in theory, research has shown that there is much room for improvement. The Swedish guardianship program was made famous with the publication of Stieg Larsson’s The Girl with the Dragon Tattoo. My research draws on examples from this novel, specifically Lisbeth Salander’s experience within the guardianship program, and connects these to current research to critique and point out flaws present in the Swedish guardianship system.