Teaching Diverse Literature For School Justice in the Rural English Classroom

Elaine Coppe
Illinois Wesleyan University

Leah Nillas, Faculty Advisor
Illinois Wesleyan University

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.iwu.edu/jwprc

Part of the Education Commons

Coppe, Elaine and Nillas, Faculty Advisor, Leah, "Teaching Diverse Literature For School Justice in the Rural English Classroom" (2017). John Wesley Powell Student Research Conference. 3.
https://digitalcommons.iwu.edu/jwprc/2017/oralpresES/3

This Event is protected by copyright and/or related rights. It has been brought to you by Digital Commons @ IWU with permission from the rights-holder(s). You are free to use this material in any way that is permitted by the copyright and related rights legislation that applies to your use. For other uses you need to obtain permission from the rights-holder(s) directly, unless additional rights are indicated by a Creative Commons license in the record and/or on the work itself. This material has been accepted for inclusion by faculty at The Ames Library at Illinois Wesleyan University. For more information, please contact digitalcommons@iwu.edu.
©Copyright is owned by the author of this document.
In racially and linguistically homogenous communities, a lack of diverse literature can lead to a lack of diverse perspectives within the classroom. In previous studies, researchers found that after teachers incorporated multicultural literature in the classroom, students were able to notice oppression and discuss its effect, relate to the characters and their situations, and move from empathy to action through global citizenship. This study aims to identify how incorporating multicultural literature in a secondary English classroom can impact students’ perceptions of the lives of others. This study was conducted in a rural high school with a class of fifteen sophomores and juniors. The students engaged in whole class and small group discussions where students reacted to the varying perspectives of characters and worked on individual reflections about what they discovered in the literature. The data includes student work samples, student surveys, teacher field notes, and teacher reflections. In today’s classrooms, empathy and understanding are invaluable learning outcomes, and this study identifies students’ reactions to multicultural literature in their homogenous classroom.