Student Senate Honors Jarvis, Kistner, Burke

March 22, 2017

BLOOMINGTON, Ill.— Professor of Nursing Carolyn Jarvis has been elected Student Senate Professor of the Year by the Illinois Wesleyan student body.

The Student Senate conducts the annual election as a way for students to show appreciation to faculty members. As Professor of the Year, Jarvis will address the Class of 2017 during Commencement on May 7.

Jarvis was in Morocco with Illinois Wesleyan students when she received the news of her selection via spotty Wi-Fi email. "It was a thrill to me, and I immediately took the phone out to our students who were all gathered," Jarvis recalled. "This honor seems like a vote of confidence from our students, that we all value the same content, and we all see it as important for patient care. I am excited and passionate about teaching this content, and it is an honor to receive this award."

Jarvis joined the faculty at Illinois Wesleyan in 1990. She earned a Ph.D. in nursing from the University of Illinois at Chicago. An internationally recognized authority on health assessment, Jarvis is the author of North America's most widely used health assessment textbook, Physical Examination and Health Assessment, now in its seventh edition. Her research interests have focused on the physiologic effect of alcohol on the cardiovascular system, and more recently, on learning Spanish in order to provide healthcare locally and in rural Guatemala. She is a member of Sigma Theta Tau, Illinois Nurses Association – 6th District, I.N.A. Council of Nurse Practitioners, American Association of Critical Care Nurses, and active in the Illinois Society for Advanced Practice Nursing.
