Paul E. Bushnell
Associate Professor of History

"A really good teacher holds up standards of scholarship and achievement," said Paul E. Bushnell. "Good teachers supply tools for students to achieve and elevate students' sights in terms of what they think they can achieve. Achievement doesn't come overnight, it's a lifelong enterprise."

Bushnell's lifelong achievements in the classroom are recognized today as IWU bestows on him its 1994 DuPont Award for Teaching Excellence, the university's top teaching honor.

"I have no illusion," Bushnell said, "that I have reached the pinnacle of the teaching art. I work at it all the time."

Higher education has been part of Bushnell's life since he was a youngster, growing up on the campus of the College of Wooster in Ohio, where his father taught education. "He was a big influence on my career choice," Bushnell said, "although I didn't realize it at the time."

Bushnell's education philosophy was shaped by a long list of outstanding teachers—from a junior high school teacher, who initially sparked his interest in history, to undergraduate and graduate school professors, who stressed critical thinking, strong writing, and ethics in their courses. He also was influenced by a year spent in Afghanistan in the early 1950s, where he saw first-hand the challenges of trying to build a western-style education system in a developing country, when his father headed Habibia College, an American-style secondary school.

As a graduate student at Yale and Vanderbilt, Bushnell became involved in the civil rights movement—an important influence in his life. While a divinity student at Yale, one of his fieldwork jobs was working with fifth graders at a YMCA boys' club in New Haven's ghetto. At Vanderbilt, Bushnell became involved in the 1960 sit-down movement in Nashville, a landmark event in the civil rights struggle.

"Those were great days of shared purpose, shared experience, and shared danger," Bushnell recalled. "What people at a greater distance sometimes failed to realize was that this was not just a movement among largely middle class black students to secure a place at a lunch counter stool, but one part of a larger movement to secure freedom and racial justice in America."

Bushnell joined IWU's faculty in 1966, after serving for four years as an assistant professor of history at Arkansas State Teachers College. Over the years, he has taught various history courses, including American history, history of religion, intellectual history, and Western civilization. He also introduced Afro-American history into IWU's curriculum, as well as seminars in the history department dealing with historical research methodology, theory and writing of history, and senior-level, semester-long research projects. With Robert Bray, IWU's R. Forest Colwell Professor of English, Bushnell edited, "Diary of a Common Soldier in the American Revolution, 1775-1783," published in 1978.

Bushnell earned a Bachelor of Arts degree from the College of Wooster, a Master of Arts degree from the University of Michigan, and a Bachelor of Divinity degree from the Yale Divinity School, and was a doctoral student at Vanderbilt University.
