St. Thecla: A Woman in Translations Hypertext and Theories of Gender Construction

Betsy T. Phillips
Illinois Wesleyan University

Alison Sainsbury, Faculty Advisor
Illinois Wesleyan University

Follow this and additional works at: http://digitalcommons.iwu.edu/jwprc/1996/posters/23
I have created a hypertext fiction, a work that exists and can only be read in the multi-dimensional space of the computer. This fiction is a reworking of the story of the fictitious St. Thecla, with connection to my own life—I am named for a series of Tecklas in my family. In this piece, I consciously explore how gender notions shape text, working from a French feminist theoretical perspective. I have been developing a text that unfolds multi-linearly and thus encourages new ways of knowing the text. Here I will present the results of my attempt to blend difficult theoretical issues with enjoyable fiction.